Gov. Shivers To Speak At Hospital Opening In Rockdale Monday, Jan. 5

Governor Allan Shivers will be the speaker at the dedication in Rockdale next Monday of the new Richards Clinic and Hospital.

The program, to which the general public is invited, will be held at the new building between 4 and 6 p. m. Monday, with John D. Harper, manager of Aluminum Company of America's Rockdale Works, introducing the governor.

Dr. John T. Richards said that the program at the dedication would be informal in nature, and that the public is invited and all visitors will be welcome to inspect the new building and facilities.

Remodeling work and improvements to the hospital building have been under way since last September. A new limestone modern front has been added and the entire hospital building remodeled and improved. In the new front portion are the offices and waiting room, while in the two wings are the operating room, laboratory, delivery room, examining rooms and nursery, in addition to the regular hospital rooms for patients. The Richards Clinic and Hospital is now a 20-bed hospital.

Dr. Richards, who is a life-long Richards clinic and hospital here in June 1949, and the latest remodeling and improvements bring it up to a modern plant in every respect. Additional new equipment has been installed, and the building has been given year-round air conditioning throughout.

Dr. Richards, who is a life-long Rockdalian, completed his work at the University of Texas Medical School in 1939. He practiced medicine in Brownwood and in Rockdale for a short time before entering the army as a first lieutenant in 1940. He was in the U. S. Army Medical Corps five years and two months, advancing to the rank of major.

Dr. Richards was stationed at the Camp Bowie Station Hospital one year and then spent two years with the Brooke General Hospital in San Antonio. He spent the remainder of the time, three years, in European theatre hospitals. While at Brooke General Hospital Dr. Richards received recognition for his research work in infectious and contagious diseases.

Returning to Rockdale in December 1946, Dr. Richards resumed his practice, with offices down town, until he opened his clinic and hospital in June 1949.

The new clinic and hospital is at the same site of the original one, but has been enlarged and completely remodeled and modernized into a 20-bed hospital to serve this area.

The public is invited to inspect the new plant at the opening Monday from 4 to 6 p. m.

ROSS PHARES

New Feature Reviews History of Texas

Under the heading, TEXAN PARADE, the Cameron Herald will carry a weekly feature by Ross Phares, beginning this week. These authentic stories will review the lives of men and women, both famous and infamous, who have had a part in the fabulous history of Texas. Mr. Phares believes that fact is stranger than fiction, and that there is no richer field for strange and gripping stories than Texas.

The author combines a broad academic background with wide personal contacts and journalistic experience to give realism in bringing to life again the personages of the past. He is the author and contributing author of several books on history and biography, and many magazine, newspaper and syndicated articles; and at one time was editor of a magazine. He has done research on Texas history in the principal archives of the United States and Mexico City and Havana. After a short career in vaudeville he taught school as a high school coach, bandmaster, principal, county supervisor, and college professor. In World War II he served as an Air Corps photographer and an historical officer. He is at present chairman of the Division of Languages and Literature at East Texas Baptist College.

These columns will constitute an informal history of the state. Persons interested in the lives of people who have played noted roles in Texas' colorful history will doubtless find these stories worth clipping for a permanent scrap book of Texas portraits.

We believe this feature will make new readers of Texans, and once you start you will not want to miss a single issue. Watch for this interesting Texas feature, starting Thursday, January 1, in the Cameron Herald.

Rockdale Plans To Build $75,000 Swimming Pool

Announcement has been made by Mayor W. P. Hogan of Rockdale that plans are under consideration for a $75,000 swimming pool to be built there next year.

The city council has been working on the idea for some time and has the active support of Aluminum Company of America and Rockdale Works Manager John D. Harper.

Officials state that they hope to arrange financing so that swimming pool bonds could be repaid out of revenue from pool operation and that the pool would be built with no extra taxation. Alcoa has offered acreage for the pool and park located between Westwood and the old city limits, which would be near the site of the coming new high school building west of the football field.

Texas Leads As Highway Deaths Climb

Chicago.—Traffic deaths climbed toward a new record Sunday night and fatal accidents soared to more than 650 as the long Christmas holiday neared its end.

The latest United Press tabulation showed 506 traffic deaths since Christmas Eve. There were also seven deaths in plane crashes, 66 in fires and 87 in miscellaneous mishaps for an overall total of 666.

In Texas, which led the states with 72 traffic deaths, three persons were killed in a smashup of five autos and a crude oil truck on a bridge near Hawley.

Ned H. Dearborn, president of the National Safety Council, said his original prediction of 500 holiday traffic deaths would probably stand and "it might even fall under that."

"For a while we were afraid the 500 figure would be horribly low," he said. "But even that is far too high."

A council spokesman said that actually deaths Sunday may run to 200 or more, which would put the final toll closer to 700.

"The last day of the holiday is always the worst," he said.

The present all-time record of 555 traffic deaths was set last Christmas, and the council's advance prediction for this Yule had been 590.

But this forecast appeared far off the mark as generally good weather lured motorists to the highways and the slaughter mounted.

Duties, Activities of National Guardsmen at Local Unit Explained

By Lloyd Albertson

Not long ago a lady living here in Cameron was talking with a member of Battery C, 649th Anti-aircraft Artillery Battalion, the local National Guard unit. She had heard that the Battery held a two-hour long drill period one night a week, and she was somewhat concerned about it.

"You mean," she asked, "they drill those poor boys for two hours? Don't they get awfully tired?"

The guardsman said they didn't. He explained that "drill period" was just the name for the time devoted to training, and that actually very little drill was done during the two hours. That is, close order drill.

She was relieved, but remained somewhat puzzled. Because if they didn't drill during the period, then what did they do?

Well, no one answer can be given to that question. The guard training schedule can—and does—include various things, and none of them may be drilled. Drill, as the guardsman inferred, is strictly for recruits. Almost as soon as a recruit learns enough of close order drill to step off on his left foot at the order "Forward, march!", and no longer turns left when the command "By the right flank, march!" is given, he is advanced to other things.

These other things include the rest of the basic training subjects—military courtesy and discipline, map reading, interior guard, first aid, to mention a few. Plus instruction on the Carbine and sub-machine gun, of course. The new guardsman gets his instruction in these subjects mostly through lectures given by the Battery's officers and non-coms. The classes usually last an hour.

And that isn't all. It is, to use a slang phrase, hardly the half of it. A unit in the National Guard, like those in the Army, is highly specialized, and each man is assigned to a particular job. So the guardsman who receives instruction in some basic subject during his first hour, in most cases receives instruction during the second hour in his own particular job along with the other men in the section to which he is assigned.

Since Battery C is a firing battery in an Anti-aircraft Artillery Battalion, its largest unit is the gun section. So the guardsman assigned to it receives instruction to make him familiar with the 40 mm guns or the 50 cal. machine guns. But the Battery has other sections, too—communications, mess and maintenance. The man in communications learns the use of radio and field telephones. A cook in the mess section becomes familiar with field ranges and recipes and food preparation. In the maintenance sections a man learns to drive and to repair jeeps and 2½ ton trucks and half tracks.

And that's the answer to the question. A guardsman does a lot of training in those two hours each Tuesday evening. But he doesn't drill on drill night. Well, not often, anyway.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Wimberly and Rev. and Mrs. Russell Lovell attended the Christmas tree program at the Milano School Thursday night.

1953 AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Approximately 2500 Milam county farmers have requested assistance from ACP to carry out needed soil and water conservation practices in 1953.

This is a majority of the farmers in the county, which indicates that the farmers of this county realize the importance of the Agricultural Conservation program in helping them conserve and rebuild their soil.

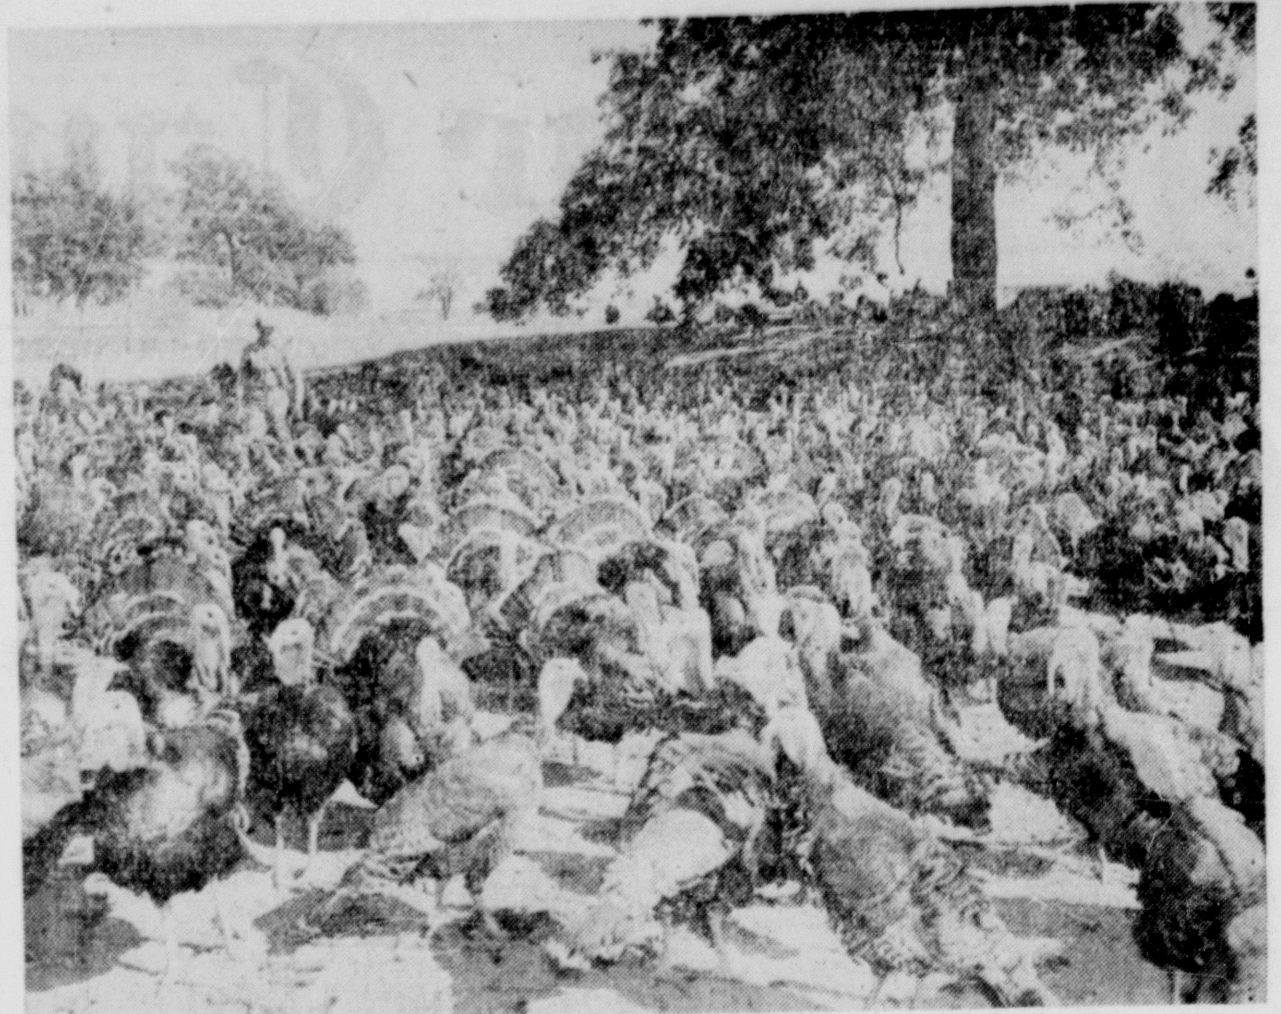

Under the 1953 ACP these farmers have requested assistance in the amount of $611,000 but the Milam county net allocation for all practices is $128,000.

Participation in the Agricultural Conservation program in Milam county has increased each year since 1950 when 1222 farms carried out one or more practices. In 1952 about 1800 farms have participated in the program. While the number of farmers participating in the program has increased tremendously, the annual appropriations for these practices have actually been decreased.

This means that only those most needed practices, selected by the farmer and his community committee can be given ACP assistance. Each farmer receiving assistance next year will be notified of the amount as soon as possible.

This flock was started on March 17 and were sold in October. Terry raised this flock under the Turkey Finance Program at the Wilson Produce Company.

Milam County's turkey population estimate for 1952 is around 50,000 head and annually brings many thousands of dollars profit to growers in this section. The Wilson Produce Company has been financing the Turkey Program for the past four years. The feed company furnishes both poult and feed supervision and also best market for the producers' birds. A broiler finance plan has been instituted for 1953.

Other large turkey raisers in this area are, L. V. Pearson, Henry Richter, Thomas Raymond, Edd Chytel, W. T. Rudder, Rex Bartlett, E. M. Willie, J. A. Petty, J. E. McDonald, C. A. McCarty, Jennings Arnold and others.

TEXAN PARADE

By ROSS PHARES

SHAM HAYS WON TEXAS' STRANGEST RACE

If you think there were no tricks in the racing business before the advent of leased wires and professional bookies you haven't heard the story of Sham Hays and the race he pulled off near Brownsville nearly a hundred years ago.

The managers of the course, on the Monongahela, announced a race of one mile heats, purse of $100, for anything "with four legs and hair."

In the settlement there lived a man named Hays, whose custom it was to ride a bull to mill, carrying sacks of corn. Hays determined to enter his bull in the race. So, on several moonlight nights, he took his bull to the grounds, and rode him around the track a few times to show him the lay of the land, and to practice him in keeping the right course.

On the day of the race Hays rode his bull onto the grounds. Instead of a saddle, he used a dried oxhide, the head, with horns still on, jogged atop the bull's rump. Hays rode with spurs, and carried a tin horn in his hand.

When he appeared at the judges' stand to enter his bull, the horse owners objected. Hays cited the terms of the announcement, pointed out that his bull had "four legs and hair" and insisted that he had a right to enter him. The argument soon reached the "cussier" stage. The horsemen didn't feel that he was hazarding their chances at the prize money; but "what a dang'd nuisance having a bull, of all things, running around on a race track."

Hays stood firm, and the judges ruled that, according to the announcements, the bull had the right to run.

The horsemen lined their mounts up at the starting post along with the bull, considering the whole thing a gag that would be over as soon as the race started.

The starting signal sounded, and the animals were off. Hays blew a blast on his tin horn, and sank his spurs into the bull's sides. The bull bounded forward with a terrifying bellow, at no trifling speed; the dried oxhide flapped up and down, rattling at every bound. Altogether there was a frightful combination of noises, never heard before on a race course. The horses tore out in every direction except down the track. And not one of them could be brought under control in time to beat the bull to the finish line.

The horse owners, hopping with rage, cried "swindle," and contended that Hays was not entitled to the purse. But the spectators, ever on the side of the underdog, and enjoying one of the greatest shows ever seen at a racetrack, were all on the side of the bull. Hays was given the purse.

Then the owners of the horses contended that had it not been for Hays' horn and the oxhide, which should not have been permitted on the ground in the first place, he would not have won.

To the surprise of everyone, Hays told them that his bull could beat them anyway. If they would put up another $100 against the purse he had just won, he would run again without his horn and oxhide.

The racers regarded this as a fool's bet. But anybody who would ride a bull about the community for a saddle horse they considered a little "touched in the head." And furthermore, a man who would enter a bull on a track against race horses was entitled to a good cleaning. To a man they called his bet.

And so the racers lined up for the second heat. At the starting signal Hays ripped his rowels across the bull's ribs and the animal let out a bellow that all but jumped the horses through their girths. They were nervous already from the first race, and doubtless expected a repeat performance. No pulling on the bits would line the horses down the track with the bull. From that first roaring bellow the way was all his.

Nobody would have believed that a man could have won one race—to say nothing of two—in one day, riding a bull against the fastest horses along the Rio Grande. But Hays did. And from that day on he was known as "Sham."

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Burnett and son, Charles were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Giles Burnett of Marlow, Newton, son of the latter couple was celebrating his fifth birthday.

Rev. and Mrs. West were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Glenn.

15 Telephones Per Minute Placed in '52

A new telephone was installed some place in the United States every four seconds of every working day in 1952.

More than 2,300,000 telephones were added to bring the total number in use to just over 48,000,000.

The huge expansion program, which cost $1,500,000,000 in 1952 and has run about $9,000,000,000 since the war, barely kept pace with the continued heavy demand for service.

The giant Bell System alone—consisting of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and its principal telephone subsidiaries—added 1,900,000 telephones during the year but still had a backlog of nearly 700,000 unfilled orders.

The 5,600 independent telephone companies, which serve fewer big cities than Bell but cover more area, expanded proportionately.

The percentage of dial telephones continued to move up, increasing from 77 per cent to 80 in the case of Bell.

There were further improvements in long distance service. Forty per cent of all long distance calls in the Bell System now are dialed directly—even coast-to-coast—by the long distance operator in the customer's home exchange, without having to go through other operators at intermediate points.

Long distance calls now can be dialed directly into 1,625 cities, a gain of 250 during the year.

53,000 Slated For Draft Call; Include 19-Yr.-Old

Washington.—The military high command stepped up its call for draftees for the Army Saturday to the highest level reached since early in the Korean war. It asked Selective Service to induct 53,000 men.

This reased the prospect that 19-year-olds would be drafted in increasing numbers. A Selective Service spokesman said state draft headquarters have been under orders to fill their quotas with older men wherever possible, but undoubtedly would be told to dip into the ranks of 19 year olds if they could not get enough men otherwise.

Brig. Gen. Guy N. Henninger, Nebraska state director of Selective Service, said at Lincoln that his state may not be able to meet its anticipated quota of about 700 without calling 19 year olds. Other states may find themselves in the same position, although officials here indicated that still others may not be forced to take 19 year olds.

Officials said there was not prospect of drafting fathers or men who already have served in Korea.
Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, assistant secretary of defense, said recently that it is planned to maintain the nation's present military strength of 3,600,000 men and women through June 1954 without drafting fathers or Korean veterans.

Officials said the high call for February was necessary to replace draftees whose terms of service are coming to an end.

The February call is the highest for the Army since the early months of 1951. There was a higher call—for 59,650 men—in January 1952, but this included 11-650 for the Marine Corps. The marines no longer are taking draftees. The Navy and Air Force also are relying on enlistments.

The February call will bring to 1,255,430 the number of men drafted since the outbreak of fighting in Korea.

Although the Defense Department's official explanation for the Programs Announced For Marlow Church

Marlow Baptist church has announced its regular Christmas tree and program for Wednesday night,
Dec. 24 at the church at 7:30.
Rev. R. B. Baker, pastor of Houston has planned the program.

Rev. Baker will show a film entitled, "The Guiding Star." Santa Claus will make his annual visit for the children.

The Marlow school held its program and tree Friday afternoon, Dec. 19. Mrs. Dot Jeter, teacher directed the program. Every pupil had a part on the program.

size of the February call was that many draftees' terms of service are about to run out, there appeared to be other factors contributing to the call.

As has been the case since May,
the Navy, Marines and Air Force have made no requests for draftees, depending on recruiting and re-enlistment to keep their strengths at required levels.

The Army's current strength is about 1,552,000. But in planning to hold the force at about that level, Army headquarters here and in the Far East obviously have had to consider such factors as these:

1. The effect of the soldier rotation program, under which men are brought back from combat and must be replaced by others.

2. The release, in addition to draftees who were inducted in the first part of the Korean war, of a large number of reservists who were called to active duty.

3. Replacement of battle casualties. This has not been a major factor in recent months, although the fall offensive of the Communists, U. S. casualties during a week mounted to an average of about 1,200. For the last few weeks casualties have run between 200 and 400.

Still Time to Plant Legumes, Small Grains For Spring Pasture

There is still a chance that winter legumes and small grains planted for pasture now will pay big dividends in the spring. According to E. M. Trew, pasture specialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, the situation is such that perennial grasses will be slow in making a start in the spring and early grazing will further damage them.

Grasses such as dallis and bermuda went into the winter in a weakened condition because of the long drouth. To graze them as soon as spring growth commences will prevent proper rebuilding of their root systems and result in low vigor and poor production throughout the growing season, says Trew.
They should be rested a few weeks,
he adds.

Winter pastures of small grains and legumes will bridge this gap.
Plantings made now are a gamble but may be justified if no other grazing is in sight, says the specialist.

Article Written By Yoe Students Appear In Junior Historian

An article written by Ann Bradbury, senior student at Yoe High School appeared in one of the recent publications of the magazine Junior Historian. The edition is published by the Texas State Historical Association in Austin.

Miss Bradbury is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Bradbury of Cameron and is a member of the Yoe High History Club and takes an active part in all school curricula.

Courthouses of Milam County

In the early part of 1846 a problem faced the court in Old Nashville, Texas. Milam county had been cut down to 991 square miles with Old Nashville in its extreme southeastern corner. The court had to find a new place that would be a central location for the county seat for the smaller county.

The court elected three commissioners to find a more suitable location for the county seat. The men chosen for this task were Israel Standish, Josiah Turham, and Daniel Monroe. These men set out to do their task as quickly as possible and in the spring of 1846 they brought back their report. They found that the best site was a spot surrounded by scrub oaks located on a hill about 20 miles northwest of Old Nashville near the wagon crossing on Little River.

In June, 1846, four men—A. W. Sullivan, Ben Bryant, John Hobson, and Daniel Moroe, were selected to lay out the plan for the new town, later to be called Cameron. The town they planned was laid out around a central square upon which the courthouse was to stand, and around this square were streets extending north, south, east and west.

The first building in the new town was the courthouse, an Jacob Gross and Wiley Jones were awarded the contract.

Like most of the buildings of its day, the courthouse was a crude board structure, approximately thirty feet wide and twenty feet long and about nine feet to the eaves. The outside was weather-boarded; floors were cut by hand with a whipsaw and covered with boards that had been ripped and shaved. There were door in the north and south walls and a window in each end. Added to this structure on the south side was a lean-to shed, it contained two rooms and the clerk's office. There was a passage leading to the courtroom from this part of the building. Soon after the completion of the courthouse the records were brought from Old Nashville to Cameron.

Several other business houses were built near the courthouse. In August, 1846, the first election was held in the new courthouse in Cameron. The officers elected were: Isaac Standifer, chief justice; John McLennan, sheriff; F. T. Duffan, county clerk; and W. W. Oxshere, district clerk.

The first court met in November, 1846. Presiding over the court were Madison Farley and Judge R. E. B. Baylor. Present also were J. D. Giddings, William H. White of Cameron, A. M. Lewis of Brenham, and James Norris of Caldwell. These men traveled about the state holding court at assigned seasons.

Cameron grew rapidly and, in 1847, the first church was organized by the Methodists. W. C. Lewis, Pleasant M. Yell, and Josiah W. Whipple were the early Christian workers in Cameron.

The young church held the first quarterly meeting in 1847 with Rev. J. W. Whipple as presiding elder.

As a town develops, its needs become greater, and so education became an important problem in Cameron. There were several "old field" schools scattered over the county, but the first school in Cameron was chartered by the state legislature in 1848. It was named the "Milam Liberal Institute" and served the town until about 1890.

As the town grew, there was a need for a larger courthouse. The old building was sold and moved to the northeastern part of town where additions were made. It became the first hotel in Cameron and was called the Phillips Hotel.

The second courtroom was sometimes used as a dancing hall for the community. These community entertainments were not always quiet and dignified. At one of the dances the county clerk, a Mr. Williams, was shot. It was alleged that as he and his wife were coming down the stairs, he was jerked from his wife's side and shot by Jim Boles.

On April 9, 1874, the new courthouse building burned, and all of the county records were lost except one surveyor's book, which was at the surveyor's home. Several courthouses in the area were burned about the same time, and it is thought that they were ignited by a man who had been accused of forgery and thus was trying to destroy all the records of his deeds.

Sheriff W. E. Mitchenson was given a warrant by the county to rent the former courthouse for $295 a month while plans were being made to build a new courthouse.

No definite steps toward building a new courthouse were taken until June 2, 1875, when P. J. Jackson was requested to hire draftsmen to draw up plans and specifications for a new building. The dimensions decided upon were fifty by sixty feet. A cupola was to be placed on top of the building.

On June 5, 1875, the court proceeded to open bids for the building of the courthouse. When the bids were received and approved, they were published as follows:

Brick and Plaster
B. T. Carlton	$8,292.64
Peter Winters	6,573.00
Arnold and Jackson	5,900.00
Woodwork, Trimming and Paint
L. B. Lamour	$6,993.00
Lockett and Cade	5,855.00
Thomas Booth	5,350.00

The brick and plastering job was given to Arnold and Jackson, and the woodwork, trimming, and paint job was given to Thomas Booth.

The treasury of the county was so low that on July 27, 1875, local citizens offered money to help raise the necessary funds for the building. An incomplete list of contributors follows:
W. A. Streetman	$300.00
C. R. Smith	100.00
J. B. Neher	25.00
J. W. Henderson	200.00
Geo. Green	100.00
W. A. Nabours	50.00
Jno. M. Mitcheeson	50.00
W. W. Oxheer	500.00
W. P. Garrett	100.00

A special tax was levied by the legislature for all residents of Milam County except those who had contributed.

The building was constructed on a "pay as you go" plan, and payments were made from the fund in the bank. When the funds ran low, construction on the building was slowed.

On March 28, 1876, Patterson and Peacock were given a contract for putting lightning rods on the completed courthouse. A weather vane was also placed on top of the cupola.

J. C. Rogers saw that the courthouse had the necessary seating equipment, and Thomas H. Breman, J. C. Rogers, and Mitt Livingston employed a mechanic to shelve the vaults of the county and distict clerk's office. These men also procured the seats and bulletin boards for the courtroom.

Because livestock wandered at will on the streets of Cameron, R. J. Boykin and J. G. Wilson were directed to build an iron fence around the courthouse yard. Entrance to the courthouse yard was gained by climbing over stiles placed over the fence.

In 1889, J. B. Gilliland was appointed to build, on the east side of the courthouse, an underground cistern which was to hold at least three hundred barrels of water. Although water is now obtained from the river, the old cistern still remains as a monument to the early pioneers of the town.

The courthouse was used until 1889 when controversy arose over the safety of the building. In November of that year the grand jury reported that he building was in bad condition and recommended that a new building be erected. The county commissioners agreed, and in the fall of 1889 County Judge E. Y. Terral was requested to advertise for one week in the Galveston Daily News that plans be submitted to the commissioners.

On December 12, 1889, a special meeting was called to consider building a new courthouse. Many of the townspeople did not favor the new construction. Among the dissenters was Judge John Henderson, who secured an injunction to stop the building program.

A number of plans were submitted in answer to the advertisement in the News. Lamour and Watson of Austin received the contract because of their superior plans. These plans were open for all to see in the county clerk's office and in the Austin office of the contractors. Bids were now being for the construction of the building, and Terral was again instructed to advertise in the Galveston News and the Fort Worth Gazette for one week. The contractors were to remove the old building and clear the courthouse yard; no materials from the old courthouse could be used in the new building. The company of Lee and Plummer was awarded the contract.

The people were still arguing about the need for a new courthouse, so all work was stopped until an agreement could be reached. Ben D. Lee, one of the contractors, was instructed by the county judge to report on the condition of the building. He reported that it was in bad condition but could be repaired. After comparing the cost of a new building with the cost of repairs, the citizens finally decided that the best thing to do would be to build a new courthouse.

A tax of fifteen cents was put on every $100 valuation of taxable property and ten cents for the succeeding five years to pay for the new courthouse.

The contractors encountered some legal difficulties, and work stopped again. The architects and contractors then became angry because of the delay and sued the county for damages. An agreement was reached, and the commission stated that all charges would be dropped. The contractors agreed that they would do the work for $75,000 instead of the original $82,275, if work could be started at once.

Permission was given for the builders to proceed, and the work was completed eighteen months later on April 20, 1892.

The furniture was purchased from Brook's Furnishings Company and was placed in the new building.

On August 16, 1893, a clock tower was ordered. The tower was to add beauty to the building, and the clock would be of service to the town. On top of the tower a statue of blindfolded Justice was mounted. On May 17, 1895, the clock which had faces on all four sides was put into the tower. In 1930 the tower of the courthouse became unsafe and was removed. The faces of the clock were placed on each wall of the building, and the clock still continues to sound out the hours as it did when it was installed in 1895. The statue (See Milam Courthouse, Page 3) was later removed from the tower and placed in storage in the Mc Lane wholesale building.

In May, 1895, a contract was let to Lawrence Water and Light Company for sewer and water installations, and electric lighting was added a few years later.

For many years no thought was given to beautifying the yard until the Woman's Civic League of Cameron decided that the courthouse should be a place of beauty. Then concrete walks were built, and the yard was landscaped. Later, an old wooden building on the north part of the lawn was torn down. An excavation was made under the courthouse, and modern rest rooms were built. A new flooring was also laid throughout the building.

A statute of Benjamin Milam, for whom the county was named, was erected on the southwest corner of the courthouse yard during the Texas Centennial in 1936. It is one of the outstanding features on the courthouse square. The trees are trimmed and benches are placed about on the grass so that the residents of the county may rest and visit.

Milam County is no longer a great agricultural area but has recently embarked upon a period of industrial development. The old courthouse, which has served Milam County for a half century, has become the depository of the records of this new era as well as the guardian of the records of its past.

Texas-Tennessee Cotton Bowl Game Will Be Televised

Austin.—Big news for football fans—you may see and hear the Texas-Tennessee Cotton Bowl game on KTBC television and radio.

In addition, KTBC-TV will broadcast most of the Rose Bowl game, following the Cotton Bowl game.

The general manager of both the television and radio stations, J. C. Kellam, announced today that both facilities would carry the Cotton Bowl game which will be sponsored by the Humble Oil and Refining Company.

On the radio broadcast, the play by play will be handled by Ves Box, with the color by Alex Chesser. Both men are well known to football fans, having handled Southwest conference games for Humble all season.

Because of the two hour time differential between Texas and Pacific Coast, Kellam said he anticipated that most of the Rose Bowl would be transmitted for KTBC-TV viewers. KTBC-TV operates on Channel 7.

This channel may be added to any existing receiving antenna by the addition of a simple and relatively inexpensive element to the antenna, Kellam said.
